

The War on the High Seas

The Watch Dogs of the British Fleet. This Photograph Shows Some of the Seaplanes Which Now Accompany Fleets. When Flying Above the Water the Seaplanes Are Able to Detect the Presence of Submarines and Give Ample Warning of Their Approach to the Larger Vessels.

The German Liner Navarra, Which Was Destroyed by the British Converted cruiser Urama in the Southern Pacific. After an Exchange of Shots the Navarra Caught Fire in Several Places and the Crew Took to the Boats, to Be Rescued by the Urama. The Photograph Shows the German Vessel Listing Heavily to Starboard Before She Made Her Final Plunge to the Bottom of the Ocean.

A German Flotilla of Submarines Being Towed by the Parent Ship Into Port. Each Division of Submarines Has In Attendance a Ship Fully Equipped with Fuel and Supplies of All Kinds for the Under-Sea Craft When Operating at Some Distance from Their Base.